OLD BROADWAY STRUCTURE FALLS BEFORE WRECKERS

A wrecking crew was busy this week demolishing the building owned by H. B. Gardiner on Broadway, and until recently occupied by Thompson's barber shop. The building is being torn down to make way for a modern building to be built on the property. Pile drivers will be on hand as soon as the old building can be removed and will make ready the foundation of the new building. Plans have not yet been completed for the new structure, but will be prepared after the foundation is laid.

The old building is a wooden affair and was added to the old Capitol hotel more than twenty years ago. It was for many years occupied by the jewelry store of the late Fred Lippman.

Grant Franchise Coyote Bridge

A franchise was granted to Frank C. Towns, Mark E. Noon and A. W. Deuel for the erection of a bridge spanning the bay from a point on this side known as Little Coyote Point to one on the Alameda county side near the highway into Haywards.

The petitioners were represented before the board by Attorney John Williams of San Mateo, who stated that in the former franchise granted to his clients for the construction of the bridge, a slight error existed which made the franchise useless to them. It was necessary that the state engineer determine the width of span necessary, Williams stated, and this had not been done before. He, therefore, asked that the former permit be revoked.

The board on a motion of Supervisor Brown, revoked the permit which was granted to these men a few months ago for the construction of the bridge. After A. Deuel, the engineer of the proposed bridge had been sworn and given testimony as to the work which had been done in the matter of surveys, etc., the board granted a second franchise, similar to the first, but with a few minor changes suggested by District Attorney Swart to make it more definite.

Williams stated that the plans of the company are now complete and that with the present franchise a permit can be secured from the War department and work begun.

FURNACE FACTORY OPENS BRANCH AT BURLINGAME

The purchasing power of the peninsula is more and more recognized by the big manufacturing concerns; as shown by the establishing of branches in our community. The latest firm to follow this policy is the Ward Furnace Company which has just opened an office at 89 Broadway. This company is one of the oldest manufacturers of floor furnaces and its product has sold itself so well that the company has already 225,000 furnace installations to its credit. The furnaces differ from the ordinary furnace in that respect, that no basement is required and that furnaces can be installed in old houses in less than a day without disarranging the whole house.

TWO LOCAL GIRLS STAR IN MUSICAL NUMBERS

The Lamb Sisters, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lamb of this city, are continuing their successful music and dance tour of the eastern states, and have taken Chicago by storm, according to reports in the Chicago papers. The Chicago American this week contained the following: "Foremost of the attractions at the New Vanity program are the Lamb Sisters, popular cafe song birds, and the new orchestra under the leadership of Arthur Cope. Mildred and Hazel Lamb are duplicating their successes of other Chicago cafes. Their many song numbers are all really enjoyable and the clever work of these young ladies is to be commended."

EPWORTH LEAGUERS HOLD RETREAT

Members of the Epworth League Alliance of San Mateo county left yesterday for Kings Mountain, where they will hold a retreat for two days. An excellent program was prepared for this occasion, including talks by Dr. Carl Warner, Stanley Baldwin, Jess Berger, and Rev. A. H. Clark, pastor of the local Methodist church.

Besides the spiritual side of life, the Epworth Leaguers will enjoy some fine sport in the redwood groves of Kings Mountain. A silver cup has been offered to the league winner in sport events, which must be won three successive years for permanent possession. A banner is also offered to the league in the district which has the largest attendance.

SEEK UNIFIED COUNTY PROGRESS

Representatives of the Peninsula Development Association and the Peninsula Chambers of Commerce Federated met last evening at Burlingame to discuss a unified plan of county development. The former organization found itself unable to carry on the work which it had laid out for itself, owing to lack of proper support. The latter body has little actual power aside from the work of its various components, so it was hoped that some plan might be worked out last night whereby the principles of both organizations might be combined for a unified work of development throughout the county. The meeting was too late to enable any statement to be made this week as to what was accomplished.

STAMP COLLECTORS MEET

The Sequoia Philatelic Society that proved so popular not only with boys and girls but also their parents and other adults interested in the hobby of stamp collecting, is now holding weekly meetings at the high school each Tuesday evening beginning at 7:00 p. m. Plans for a year of very interesting activity have been formulated which will include talks by prominent philatelists, exhibitions, talks by members on the various countries of the world, indexing a map of the world, stamp auctions, buying, selling and trading, current reports of stampic importance, etc. Not only those who have collections but those who would like to know more about stamp collecting and the values to be gained therefrom are invited to attend meetings. Parents are especially invited to attend that they may be able to sympathize with their children in the pursuit of this hobby. Schools are learning the importance of this hobby in creating interest along educational lines and are organizing stamp clubs. Stamp collecting is not only a hobby for children but clubs are springing up in connection with high schools and institutions of higher learning. There are also adult societies in practically every city of importance over the country. The individual collector finds it very difficult to get the most from his collection if he does not have a group of friends about him who have similar interests. The Sequoia Philatelic Society is filling this need for Redwood City and the vicinity. This society is being promoted through the Y. M. . A. as a party of its work in the community. Further information can be secured by calling Roy A. Hohberger at Redwood 1155-W.

CITY BRIEFS

The members of Redwood Parlor, N. S. G. W. will be guests of Pacific Parlor in San Francisco next Tuesday evening. Those wishing to attend the meeting are requested to notify Judge Griffin on or before Monday evening next. The Natives will be conveyed to San Francisco by automobiles leaving here about 7 o'clock.

About forty of the teachers and trustees of the local schools met at the Cafe de Paris Wednesday evening for a dinner and dance. Both forms of entertainment were indulged in and enjoyed by those present.

Rev. R. J. Currie addressed the members of the Redwood City Kiwanis Club last Wednesday on his trip to Canada. His talk was much enjoyed. The club held a bundle day Wednesday for the benefit of the Welfare Shop. The members also contributed $50 for the Florida relief.

Rev. A. H. Clark of the Methodist church returned this week from the annual conference held at Santa Cruz. While there he met Rev. Steven Thomas, Rev. Brice and Rev. M. B. Young, former pastors of the local charge.

R. L. Waggoner, paster of the church in Quincy, California, will be the speaker at the Methodist church tomorrow evening. Rev. Waggoner is well known for his work among children, and he has been able to effect wherever he has been stationed, an organization which is as successful as it is unique. His address tomorrow night will be an interesting one.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Tuchsen visited Mr. and Mrs. Valentine Tuchsen at their home in Newark.

Mr. and Mrs. Harland Mansfield visited friends and relatives here this week and are now visiting at the summer cabin of W. W. Hilton in Redwood Park. The Mansfields, former Redwood City people, now reside in Los Angeles.

Mrs. Earl Rush entertained a number of friends at her home on Harrison street Wednesday. Those present were Mesdames G. P. Downs, J. J. Morriss, Mrs. A. P. Whitehead, John Rhoda, James O. Wallace and Hazel Myers.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Uhlenberg were the guests of honor at a party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Emiel Berndsten last Friday evening. Those present were Mr. aad Mrs. Uhlenberg, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Hundevadt, Mrs. M. Iverson, W. Nelson, L. E. Doolittle and Mr. and Mrs. Berndsten. Mr. Uhlenberg recently returned from Denmark, where he and Mrs. Uhlenberg were married.

Mrs. Lizzie Tyson, who passed away this week in Oakland, will be remembered by many here as Mrs. George Green, wife of the sheriff of this county, who lost his life some 40 years ago when he was drowned in the bay near this city.

Members of the Redwood City Exchange Club were given an interesting talk Tuesday evening by Al Whiting on the subject of late developments in the production of phonoraphs. Ray Smith, secretary of the Palo Alto chamber of Commerce also addressed the club. A. J. Kenney was the chairman of the meeting.

Word was received this week that Jack Kellogg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Kellogg of this city, a sophomore at the University of Nevada, sufered a broken rib in the Freshman-Sophomore rush.

Dr. Walter Barret visited friends in this city yesterday. Dr. Barret, who is the son of one of the pioneer physicians of this city, the late Dr. W. M. Barrett, is now practicing dentistry at 282 University avenue, Palo Alto.

A large number of local Masons with their families and friends enjoyed the annual picnic of the lodge on the grounds of the Bear Gulch Water Company. The affair was the best attended of any since the custom was inaugurated and was most enjoyable.

The fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Hope Encampment No. 36 I. O. O. F. was fittingly celebrated last Saturday evening in the Odd Fellows hall. The affair was enjoyed by about 300 Odd Fellows, including many of the grand officers of the order.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Polglase of Stambaugh street after attending the State Fair and visiting friends at Sacramento, went to Salinas, where they are spending the remainder of their vacation with relatives.

Miss Adelaide Butts entertained a number of her friends at her home on Pennsylvania avenue recently. Those present were Mesdames Charles Rockwell, Seymour Eikerenkotter, Percy Long, Sam Winklebleck, Angelo Guido and Thomas Casey, the Misses Lorraine Dickey, Margaret Kirtland and Adelaide Butts.

The Misses Claire and Beatrice Schweickert were joint hostesses to the members of the Social Hour Sewing Club at their home on Maple street Wednesday evening. Their guests included Misses Janet Stevenson, Claire Colding, Margaret Cussen, Anita Cussen, Angelina Faso and Lucile Deis.

LOCAL COUPLE CELEBRATE GOLDEN WEDDING YEAR

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Beeson, former pioneer residents of Redwood City, celebrated their golden wedding at the home of their son near Marysville, September 21, 1926. Many friends and relatives were present to help celebrate the big event in the lives of the jubilirians.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Beeson were married in Iowa on September 21, 1876. Mr. Beeson as a youngster made a trip to Iowa and while their fell in love with beautiful Miss Elizabeth Lewis The romance terminated in a marriage a short time after. The young couple remained in that state for four years when they came to Redwood City, where they lived up until a short time ago.

Mr. Beeson's father and mother came to Redwood City in 1853. He was a wheelwright by occupation and for years followed his trade in this city, retiring many years ago, passing away only fifteen years since. He was one of the builders of this city, taking part in all the progressive movements of the early days.

The elder Beeson lived for a short time at Pescadero and here W. W. Beeson was born. The latter attended the grammar school here until he grew to manhood, when he learned the blacksmith's trade, an occupation he followed up until his retirement years ago when he sold his blacksmith shop on the corner of Cedar and Mound streets to Victor Mitchell, the present owner.

Mr. and Mrs. Beeson are well known in Redwood City and are held in high esteem by their former friends and neighbors. Many letters and communications were received by the julibarians from their many friends on the peninsula.

Those who attended the dinner given in their honor at their son's home were Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Beeson, their son, Warren Beeson, Eleanor Beeson, Robert Beeson, Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Beeson, Milton Beeson, oris Beeson, Mr. and Mrs. Adolf Hurlinmann, Adolf and Edward Hurlinmann and Willis Leslie.

JURY FAILS TO AGREE IN SUIT AGAINST RAILWAY

A jury failed to agree in Judge Buck's court here Monday in the case of Hale Warn against the Market Street Railway Company and the judge dismissed them at 5 o'clock when they informed him that there was no possibility of reaching an agreement.

Warn asked damages in the sum of $28,999.95 for injuries sustained when his automobile was struck by a suburban car near Holy Cross ceretery on July 18, 1922. Monday's trial was the second held on the case with the jury failing to agree on a verdict.

Warn was represented by Attorney Franklin Swart and Ralph Lachmund, Attorneys Ross & Ross and Walter H. Linforth represented the Market Street Railways.

PHELPS STREET WORK ORDERED TO PROCEED

Th final act of the long-drawn discussion over the improvement of Phelps street was staged Monday evening at the meeting of the town board, and came to a finalll when City Clerk Price was ordered to call for bids. The board before doing so overruled the verbal protests of a number of property owners who appeared before the board.

The new proceedings were made necessary by the consent of the county to give one third of the cost of the work, or $13,333 toward the improvement of this street.

Miss Annie Offerman asked concerning the replacement of broken curbs. Mayor Henry Beeger stated that if any way could be found to do so, the city would stand the expense of repairing curbs where the same are broken. She also asked if the city would not pay a third of the cost, but this was stated by the board to be impossible.

Mrs. Mary Granger asked if the street would be torn up again as soon as it was put down, in order that pipes might be laid.

The board stated that it could not guarantee that the street would not be cut into, but Mayor Beeger stated that the gas from pany had been asked to replace any old mains while the street was torn up, and that new water connections made of copper would be put in place, and that he saw no reason why the street would have to be opened for many years.

ROAD TO BRIDGE URGED BY REALTORS

The commitee which was appointed by the Redwood City District Real Estate Board has been augmented by the addition of two more of the local realtors and will continue as a committee to further plans for a direct road from this city to the western terminal of the Dumbarton bridge. Two of the original committee consisted of D. R. Stafford, chairman, Julius Smith and L. A. Heiner. To these three, H. C. Tuchsen and C. H. Holt have been added.

The recommendations of the committee are contained in a report rendered by them to the realty board. The report follows:

Redwood District Real Estate Board,
Redwood City, Calif.
Gentlemen:

It gives the Dumbarton Highway committee great pleasure to submit the following report:

We have investigated the possibilities of a direct roadway from the Dumbarton bridge to the Middlefield road without crossing the Southern Pacific railroad. We find that this roadway is possible, and is most necessary, and would be of unlimited benefit to San Mateo county, and to the bridge users going to and from the north.

Our recommendations are that a 100-foot roadway be constructed starting at the toll gate at the westerly end of the Dumbarton bridge road, then proceeding in a northwesterly direction paralleling the Southern Pacific railroad, then through the Sweeney ranch and connecting up with the Middlefield road just south of Charter street.

It is to be noted that this road will cross the proposed Bayshore righway, but does not parallel it.

We urgently suggest that our president immediately appoint a permanent committee to wait upon the supervisors, and see that this highly important project is brought before them and carried through to completion.

As this committee's work has been completed we wish to thank the president for our appointment and the pleasure we have had in making these recommendations, and we respectfully resign.

Very truly yours.
DANIEL STAFFORD,
Chairman.

MANY NOVELTIES PROMISED IN CIRCUS AT BURLINGAME

Hundreds of persons from this place will doubtless be in attendance at the performance of the Sells-Floto Circus, when it pays its visit to Burlingame on Thursday, Sept. 30th. This show, one of the most popular of the big circus organizations, according to advance press notices, has been greatly enlarged this season, there having been notable additions to the program of the circus and to the menagerie section as well.

Sells-Floto is known as the only exclusive circus in the world—that is, it is purely a circus and not an aggregation of vaudeville acts under canvas. All the old-time features of the circus are retained, and especially strong is the section which includes the performing wild animals.

Included in this section are elephants of course, three herds of them, and all perfectly trained, two troupes of lions, two of Bengal tigers, and two of polar bears, the latter being a real novelty act in view of the fact that polar bears are among the most difficult to train.

As an added attraction the circus has Buffalo Bill's Wild West, with a large number of full blooded Indians.

Of course, in this day of "jazz" no one will want to miss the performances of the "Charlestoning Elephants." Sells-Floto have the only ones who have been perfected in the fad of dance of the century.

Other well-known acts include the famous Flying Wards 'Poodles' Hannaford and his riders, the 60 Liberty Horses, half a hundred clowns, Vic Robbins' big band and 101 other acts which require the services of more than 400 performers.

Two performances will be given, the circus being located in Burlingame on the big lot at

SEWING CLUB MEETS

The Sunshine Sewing Club met Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. G. Raffensperger on Jefferson avenue to sew for a bazaar to be held by the club in the near future. Those present were Mesdames A. Buss, S. D. Miller, W. Tucker, F. Genzen, H. Rice, N. Mayhew, N. Kniveton, C. Mills, M. Wilder, C. Raffensperger, E. Southward, E. Provost and I. Dupret.

Plans were also discussed for a card party to be held later this month. The next meeting of the club will be held next Wednesday at the home of Mrs. H. Rice on Stambaugh and Spruce streets.

JUDGE RAY GRIFFIN IS ELECTED ASSOCIATION HEAD

At the annual convention of the Justice, Traffic and Peace Officers held last Saturday at Del Monte, a signal honor was conferred upon bustice of the Peace Ray Griffin of this city in being elected president of the organization. Another San Mateo county man to be honored at this time was Justice of the Peace Edward Farrel of South San Francisco, who was elected vice-president.

The convention of this year is reported to have been one of the most successful and interesting yet to be held by the association. Many matters of interest pretaining to traffic regulation and other points were discussed. The association comprised all the counties of the central part of California.

BIDS CALLD FOR ON NORTH PALO ALTO STREETS

The board of supervisors last Monday decided to call for bids for the paving of the streets of the North Palo Alto district. This action was taken after an argument among the property owners which was begun at the last meeting and carried over until last Monday. The action of the board was in line with the wishes of the majority of the property owners in the district.

Judge E. D. Lakin of Palo Alto, representing the First National Bank of Palo Alto, one of the chief protestants in the matter, was the first to speak. Lakin claimed that the bank was directly interested, not only on account of its own holdings in the district, but because of property held on mortgage, which it may have to assume Albert Mansfield, city attorney of Redwood City, acted as representative of the proponents. Attorney Frank Reynolds also appeared before the board in favor of the paving, representing the North Palo Alto Residents Association. Letters urging the board to take favorable action on the matter were received from Norman Vogt, W. H. Parkin, Mrs. Alexander Greer, Chas. L. Childress, Paul Boyer, Jack Diamond, Chas G. Morgan and Mary A. Newell.

Earl Wilsey, a deputy in the office of County Engineer Geo. A. Kneese, presented a map of the district in which was shown the property of those favoring and those opposing the improvement. The former were in the majority by about 3 to 2.

Chairman MacBain was careful before putting the motion, to ascertain that the board obligated itself in no way in calling for bids, and that all bids could be rejected if not satisfactory to the property owners.

COMMITTEE WORKS ON HARBOR PLANS

City Engineer C. L. Dimmitt and City Attorney Albert Mansfield called upon Major Schultz of the United States War Department yesterday in regard to the proposed development of the harbor here. The gentlemen were in conference yesterday and what was accomplished was not known at the time of this paper going to press. It is expected, however, that definite information concerning the government's attitude in the matter will be given out soon.

The visit of the local men to Major Schultz followed a meeting of the city trustees last Friday evening with representatives of the Pacific Portland Cement Co., and other parties interested in the proposed development as well as representatives of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce.

The meeting was presided over by Mayor Henry Beeger of this city and was addressed by a number of parties interested including E. B. Hinman, president of the Redwood City Chamber of Commerce.

The plans which had been prepared by J. H. Fairbanks, engineer who had been employed by the city to make the preliminary surveys were fully discussed. A few changes were suggested, owing to the unwillingness of some of the owners of the marsh land to part with the small amount of land which would be necessary should the original dredging program be carried out. In order to avoid the waste of land it was suggested that the channel be not so wide as planned. It was also suggested that the channel be made somewhat longer than was called for in the plans as drawn up by Fairbanks. The reduction of the number of piers from six to one was also decided upon.

These changes in plans were to be carried to Major Schultz by a committee consisting of the city enineer, city attorney and George A. Merrill, president of the Redwood Harbor Company.

HOW I IMPROVED MY HEALTH

Did It in Less Than One Month

As Mrs. Weaver herself says, "I was never very strong." This is a mild statement describing her condition, for, according to her letters, she was subjected to no small amount of ill health. Fortunately, her sister was familiar with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and begged Mrs. Weaver to try it. "After three or four weeks," writes Mrs. Weaver, "I felt a great difference in myself. I would go to bed and sleep sound, and although I could not do very much work, I seemed stronger. I kept on taking it and now I am well and strong, do my work and take care of three children. I sure do tell my friends about your wonderful medicine, and I will answer any letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Lawrence Weaver, East Smithfield St., Mt. Pleasant, Pa.

If you knew that thousands of women suffering from troubles similar to those you are enduring had improved their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, wouldn't you think it was worth a trial?

In some families, the fourth generation is learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Interesting Collection

For twenty years or more Mrs. Harry Sproule of Los Angeles has been collecting picture post cards, some on her own account, but mostly from friends traveling abroad. Her collection is amazing, nearly 30,000 of them, all pasted neatly in books according to country. She has them from all sorts of remote places and can turn up any one of them for reference at a moment's notice. She bemoans the fact that post cards used to be much more interesting and of better quality. She says they are getting shoddier every year now.

Too Much "Acid?"

Excess Uric Acid Gives Rise to Many Unpleasant Troubles.

AUTHORITIES agree that an excess of uric acid is primarily due to faulty kidney action. Retention of this toxic material often makes its presence felt by sore, painful joints, a tired, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backache and headache. That the kidneys are not functioning right is often shown by scanty or burning passage of secretions. THE KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

We must be as courteous to a man as to a picture which we are willing to give the benefit of a good light.—Emerson.

SEASONABLE FOODS

The tender new cabbage which is now on the market makes a vegetable which is delicate and full of flavor. But to cook cut into halves or quarters according to the size, removing the hard core. When cooked in as little water as possible, or better, steamed, dress with cream or milk and butter, season with salt and pepper and serve. Grated cheese added to the hot cream adds much to the nourishment of the dish as well as its flavor.

Nut Loaf.—For those who enjoy the meatless diet this recipe will appeal: Take three cupfuls of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two-thirds of a cupful of sugar, one cupful of milk, a teaspoonful of salt and one egg well beaten, one cupful of pecan meats. Sift the dry ingredients, add milk, egg, and nuts. Pour into a greased pan and let stand twenty-five minutes. Bake in a slow oven nearly an hour. Nice for sandwiches with a salad, making a well balanced meal with a hot drink.

Spiced Tongue.—This is pre-eminently a warm weather dish, but seldom seen served in any home. Drop a fresh beef tongue into boiling water to cover, add a pinch of salt and a small pepper pod. Cook gently until the tongue is tender. Remove from the broth, cool and peel off the skin. In a saucepan with four tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful each of ground cloves, allspice, and one cupful of water, and one-half cupful of vinegar, simmer until the liquid is entirely evaporated. Turn the tongue often. Chill and cut into thin slices and garnish with lemon and parsley.

Cucumber Soup.—Peel and slice two large cucumbers, remove the seeds and boil in salted water for ten minutes. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in a deep frying pan, put in the drained cucumber, cover and cook gently for half an hour; drain, put through a sieve. Mix two tablespoonfuls of butter with two of flour, add a quart of white stock and a pint of milk, add the cucumber and simmer for a few minutes. Beat the yolks of two eggs with two tablespoonfuls of heavy cream, add to the soup and serve at once.

Riches are so great a temptation to ease and self-indulgence, to which men are by nature prone, that the glory is all the greater of those who were born to ample fortune, nevertheless take an active part in the work of their generation. Keeping busy, doing something worth while, saves many a doctor's bill and many hours of suffering.

Children's Lunch Boxes.

Packing a school lunch box five days a week for thirty weeks or more on a stretch is powerful constant and monotonous. Of course children to do good work must be well nourished and when possible it is best to give them a warm dinner at night. For the outdoor worker and the office woman the lunch must vary in quantity and somewhat in quality, but there are general directions which will apply to all lunch packing.

There is no one who is so blind to the niceties of life that he does not appreciate a well-prepared and packed lunch, though it be nothing but a sandwich. Throwing together a mess of food, totally unrelated, mixing flavors and making a messy, unsightly appearance would disturb the digestion of an ostrich.

The daily sandwich is almost a necessity, though at times scoop out a roll or two and fill with a salad, not too moist, which will make a most palatable dish.

Personal tastes must always be taken into account when preparing a lunch basket.

The one who likes a hot or cold drink can carry it in a thermos bottle.

For those who are fond of fresh ripe tomatoes a most appetizing sandwich may be prepared. Place a slice of tomato, a thin slice of cheese, with a little salad dressing between slices of buttered bread. Two of these with two of some other variety, with a cup cake and an apple or other fruit will make a good lunch with a glass of milk.

In many of our country schools where domestic science is taught the children prepare one hot dish at noon. This helps out the mother with her lunch packing.

Two sandwiches of bread and butter with jam or jelly and two of chopped ham and a glass of apple salad, a piece of ginger bread and a cup of hot cocoa is another good day's luncheon.

A handful of nuts, a few dates, a piece of candy, a fresh apple, pear or banana will always delight the child.

Those of us who can remember when we carried a lunch to school, what a thrill we had on finding down in a corner or hidden carefully a small treat all wrapped away to surprise us, will be happy to do the same willing service for those who must carry lunches.

COATS OF UTILITY TYPE; MILADY'S SHOES COLORFUL

IT IS high time to be buying one's new coat or fall, and just what shall it be? It all depends, for there is a most clean-cut distinction drawn this season between informal and formal coats. As to the practical utility coat, and it is the one which interests most of us who are either at school or at business and if at leisure planning health-giving hikes over countryside and moor, the major trend is to handsome and striking novelty woolens, fur-collared and often fur-cuffed, generously pocketed and sturdily built in fashion smart as smart can be.

When it comes to dressy wraps for social occasion, that is a different also the lining which is of quality-kind crepe de chine. The raglan sleeved topcoat is very much in evidence this season.

Let's talk of something cheerful—shoes for instance, for never have they been more fanciful, more colorful or more beautiful than at this very moment, and for time to come according to displays of advance autumn modes. Not only are the leathers of which present-day shoes are made almost sensationally unique, but there is also an interesting use of fascinating color.

To be sure, for practical utility wear, there are excellent styles which help us keep in mind that "shoes is shoes," but when it comes to the dressier modes, oh me, oh my! where are the adjectives to describe them. Perhaps this picture of four of the reigning styles will best tell the story of the elaborate trend of modern shoe-ology.

Fur-Collared Woolen Coat.

In the list of shoe fashions the pair shown first in this illustration register as strap sandals. In line with the thought that the smartest footwear this season invariably features a combination of colors, narrow underlays and heels of blond kid combine with champagne kidskin.

A French tie-model is shown to the right which declares most frankly the supremacy of the extremely ornate, in that it combines royal blue lizard skin on a background of pearl gray kid.

The newest note in Paris is the slipper which appears from the outer side to have but one strap, which develops into three narrower straps across the inside. This modish pair in the picture, shown to the left, are of parchment kidskin.

Cutout effects are very fashionable as defined in the exquisite kid slippers are exceptionally handsome. Black and white plaids in deep-pile wool are stunning trimmed with either black or white fur.

It seems as if novelty woolens call for fur as unique and it is a fact fur trims are almost without exception included in every coat styling. A fur collar is almost a certainty on every topcoat for sports or utility, and often there are wide fur cuffs, likewise frequently neck to hem revers, but hemline borders are conspicuous by their absence.

The attractive topcoat in the picture aptly defines the popular trend in coats for schoolgirl, business woman and for general practical wear. The fur collar is toned to the browns in the fabric patterning, as is which conclude this interesting group of leading footwear styles.

The close relationship between fall dress colors and the tones and tints of new leathers is a subject to ponder over. Many snakeskin slippers appear to have been dyed to match the costume. Bright green, royal blue and red are shades noted in footwear now at fashion's rendezvous.

In practical daytime styles for fall, favor is expressed for black patent leather, also tan in both dark and light shades. Growing demand for moderate cuban heels is noted, especially among American women, although abroad the higher heels are very much in evidence.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Germany Enters the League of Nations and Spain Resigns in Anger.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GERMANY at last is in the League of Nations—and Spain is out of it. The seventh assembly of the league, in Geneva, voted the German republic a member unanimously, and approved the designation of Germany to a permanent seat in the league council. Forty-eight nations participated in the voting and the approval was when the result was announced was long and loud.

In the effort to conciliate Spain and Poland, who had demanded permanent seats, the league leaders planned to create three semi-permanent seats, enlarging the council to that extent. M. Hymans of Holland and Doctor Nansen of Norway both criticized this measure, charging that steam-roller tactics were employed. Doctor Nansen expressed surprise at a statement by Senator Motta of Switzerland that, if the nonpermanent council members were not augmented, Germany's withdrawal might be imperiled. Both speakers, however, admitted that the Spanish crisis must be solved as soon as possible.

Dispatches from Spain, meanwhile, declared that a cabinet council presided over by King Alfonso had agreed that Spain should refuse the semi-permanent seat and resign from the league, and that the letter of notification was drawn up by Primo de Rivera, the dictator, and Foreign Minister Yanguas. They reproached the league for lack of consideration shown to Spain—her prestige, traditions, and importance as another country of 20 Latin-American nations who speak the same language. Official statement of this action was delayed. Of course, Spain's resignation does not take effect until after two years have elapsed, but it is supposed she will not participate in the league's activities in the interim.

The German delegation arrived at Geneva, and the last action was taken in admitting the republic to the league. The Teutons were headed by Foreign Minister Stresemann and had with them a number of advisers.

At the council session a project was adopted for a settlement of 120,000 Bulgarian refugees who have been forced out of various Balkan states. A loan of $12,000,000 is called for by the scheme. M. Caolamanos of Greece suggested that Bulgaria is preparing to construct a strategic railway paralleling the Greek frontier. He said the road is to serve for military purposes and the rapid mobilization and transfer of troops in case of hostilities.

MORE immediately important to Spain than the league row was the discovery and suppression of a mutiny in the artillery corps. Officers of certain garrisons, supported by artillery batteries, refused to obey orders and were quickly placed under arrest. The king hurried from San Sebastian to Madrid and at the request of Dictator de Rivera signed an edict dissolving the artillery corps and declaring a state of siege throughout the country. Gen. Fabriciano Haro y Peralta, chief of the artillery section of the ministry of war, was relieved of his post. There was no bloodshed except at Pamplona, where two of the mutineers were killed and two wounded. At the bottom of the revolt was apparent order doing away with the seniority rule in promotions. Despite the censorship, the news leaked out and it is said that the king had persuaded General de Rivera that lenient treatment of the offenders would be the wise course.

FOUR Republican senators who sought renomination in last week's primaries three were successful and one was turned down by the voters of his party. The senator who failed was Senator Irvine L. Lenroot of Wisconsin, and he was beaten by Gov. John J. Blaine. The contest was a tangle of La Folletteism and Volsteadism. In the gubernatorial race it appeared that the so-called Madison ring controlled by La Follette received a hard blow in the nomination of Fred R. Zimmerman over the "ring's" candidate, Attorney General Herman L. Ekern. Returns would indicate that the Republican nominees for the other state offices are the members of the La Follette-Progressive ticket. They are: Lieutenant governor, Henry H. Huber; treasurer, Solomon Levitan; attorney general, John W. Reynolds, and secretary of state, Theodore Dammann.

Up in New Hampshire, Senator George H. Moses, foe of the World court, easily won renomination, despite the fight put up by former Governor Bass. His Democratic opponent will be Robert C. Murchie of Concord, who won the nomination over Albert W. Noone of Peterboro. The Republicans refused to shatter a forty-eight-year-old tradition and Gov. John G. Winant was defeated for renomination by Huntley N. Spaulding of Rochester. Not since 1878, when the two-year gubernatorial term was adopted, has New Hampshire sent a governor back to office.

Nevada Republicans renominated Senator Tasker L. Oddie, a World court advocate, rejecting E. E. Roberts, mayor of Reno. In the Democratic race for the senatorial nomination Raymond T. Baker, who served under Woodrow Wilson as director of the mints, held a lead over his three opponents in the four-cornered race.

Senator Cameron of Arizona was unopposed for renomination, but there was a hot fight down there over the governorship. G. W. P. Hunt sought the Democratic nomination for his sixth term and at this writing has a commanding lead over his two rivals, E. E. Ellingwood and J. J. Cox. The Democrats named Congressman Carl Hayden as their senatorial choice. Republicans put E. S. Clark up for governor.

Dispatches from Washington say that Senator Ashurst of Arizona, Democrat, declares that if William S. Vare of Pennsylvania and Frank L. Smith of Illinois are elected to the senate he will move to unseat them when their credentials are presented, on the ground of excessive expenditures in the primaries.

"Wets" found some degree of satisfaction in the defeat of Representative Upshaw (Dem., Ga.) for renomination. This feeling, however, was tempered by the fact that they failed to gain a member, as Lester J. Steele, his successful opponent, also is classified as a "Dry."

CABLEGRAMS indicating that the understanding in European capitals was that the Coolidge administration was planning a vast development of military aviation led the President to redefine his position in this and allied matters. He declared himself opposed to any military aviation or naval-building program that might provoke competitive building by other nations. So determined is the President to avoid giving other powers any incentive for naval competition with the United States that this government will not build auxiliary warcraft on the basis of the 5-5-3 ratio established for capital ships of Great Britain, the United States, and Japan by the Washington treaty limiting naval armaments. Under this policy the American navy may continue below parity with the British and less than two-fifths stronger than the Japanese.

The President holds that American naval craft in every class not covered by the Washington treaty shall be built with an eye single to the defense needs of the United States. We are not to build cruisers, submarines, aircraft, and other auxiliaries to give the United States as many of these craft as Great Britain possesses and two-fifths more than Japan either has built or building. We are to consider only the number of ships we need for defense and to build accordingly. If that number falls below the treaty ratio, we are not to worry.

WITHOUT great hope of its success, the Catholic episcopate of Mexico presented to the congress its bill asking for reforms in the laws governing the church, and it was immediately taken up for study by the senators and deputies, who are anxious to get the religious question out of the way. The bill was also sent to all the state governors and legislatures for consideration, since a majority of the states must assent to any changes in the constitution. The petition carrying the bill, after explaining that the Catholic church has no desire to mix in politics but will maintain itself within its own proper sphere, declares that while the government has the right to dictate laws governing the church in so far as its civil state is concerned, it has no right to invade the territory belonging peculiarly to the church.

PRISONERS captured by federal officers near Raymondsville, Texas, for gathering arms, presumably to be carried into Mexico, agreed to lead the officers to the place where the weapons were cached. The prisoners were ordered to precede the officers into the brush. They had gone about 100 yards in this manner when fire was suddenly opened from ambush. Two of the prisoners fell at the first shots. The officers quickly took to cover and returned the fire, and when the fight ended there were four dead Mexicans and one dead Austrian. None of the officers was hit.

HARRY M. DAUGHERTY, former attorney general of the United States, and Col. Thomas W. Miller, former alien property custodian, went on trial in New York on charges of conspiracy to defraud the government. The trial is based on what is known as the American Metals case. The defendants are accused of having accepted a bribe of $391,000. In return for this sum, in the language of the indictment returned by a federal grand jury in May, they are accused of approving "a claim of $6,453,979, made upon the alien property custodian by the Societe Suisse pour Valeurs des Metaux—wholly without reference to the legality or merits of said claim."

THE British appear to be getting seriously entangled in the fighting that is going on along the Yangste river between the Chinese factions, and they have been getting in bad with both the bolshevik Cantonese forces and the troops from the north. The row with the latter started at Wanhsien when General Yang-sen, ally of Marshal Wu-Pei-fu, tried to seize two British ships. British gunboats went to the rescue but were repulsed by the land forts and suffered several casualties. The English guns, however, are said to have laid the city of Wanhsien practically in ruins. At Hankow, center of the conflict between the northern and southern Chinese, the British and French landed bluejackets and helped the local volunteers to construct barricades along the bund. But a late report to London says the British party from the cruiser Carlisle was attacked by the Cantonese and cut to pieces. Meanwhile Wu's forces there collapsed when the Canton troops captured the nearby city of Hanyang. After the latter occupied Hankow and Wuchang, General Wu fled to Honan.

At Shameen, the foreign residential settlement of Canton, a British naval detachment was landed to protect a British-owned wharf and it arrested some Chinese snipers. Now the Cantonese government foreign minister has written the British consul general demanding the immediate withdrawal of British marines from the jetties near Shameen; the cessation of British interference with river traffic, and retirement of British gunboats to their usual anchorages.

ONE of the worst train wrecks of recent times occurred when a Denver & Rio Grande passenger train struck a boulder in the mountainous country near Leadville, Col., and dived downward into the Arkansas river. The engine, baggage cars, two coaches and one sleeper piled up in eight feet of water. The casualties were 27 dead and scores of injured.

In Chicago a Northwestern train telescoped the rear coaches of another that was loaded with returning Labor day excursionists, and five persons were killed and more than fifty were hurt.

...ble Life Appeals to Bulgar Princess

...in.—Princess Eudoxie of Bul-..., the twenty-eight-year-old sister ...g Boris and daughter of the for-...zar Ferdinand, in her memoirs, ...hed in the National Zeitung, ... that a princess does not always ...such a "soft snap."

... describes the training she and ...rother received for their royal ..., but confesses to having a de-... predilection for a home life, which, she says, "may seem anomalous in our present era of excitement; but is perhaps to be explained by the absence of woman suffrage in our country." As in Bulgaria, women are rather inclined to adapt themselves to the reasoning of men, the princess considers such an innovation uncalled for.

The royal writer refutes the frequent opinion that princesses only wear gorgeous gowns and bedeck themselves with rare jewels.

"On the stage and the screen," she declares, "we are even portrayed with diamond crowns and robes of ermine. But as a matter of fact I prefer the simplest of clothes and during the last two years have only had two new gowns made, all-Bulgarian in style, material and workmanship.

"Expenses entailed by a more costly wardrobe the princess insists she can use to a better purpose in alleviating the distress of the many impoverished Bulgarians. But, unfortunately, there are never sufficient funds available to supply the wants of all.

American Flowers to Bloom at Stockholm

Flowers from Yellowstone park will soon blossom in the royal gardens of the Swedish capital, according to word received in Washington by the United States national park service from Prof. H. S. Conrad of Grinnell college, director of the lecture and nature guide service in the park. During the recent tour of Crown Prince Gustavus Adolphus and his consort through Yellowstone National park, Professor Conrad was detailed to accompany the royal party and to give the prince, whom he found to be an enthusiastic and well-informed botanist, the benefit of his intimate knowledge of the mountain flora. Professor Conrad has shipped to Stockholm a collection of the rarer species of Yellowstone plants, not as yet represented in the royal herbarium, and he has also sent seeds of a number of the choicer flowers which, it is hoped, will become permanent American representatives at the Swedish court.

Chicks Knew the Call

The perplexing problem of identifying 135 stolen chickens from a flock of 5,000 was solved by Mrs. Alfred Garand at Williamstown, N. J. When the police asked her to prove ownership, Mrs. Garand stood in an adjacent field and began to whistle "There's no place like home." One by one the chickens hopped out of the flock and came over to her until 135 chickens, looking very much like brothers and sisters, stood peeping and crowing at her feet. The woman explained that every morning before feeding her flock she whistled that tune in the poultry house, a signal for straying chicks to crowd around the cracked-corn hopper.

Lusitania Still Cruising

Every once in a while you will read in the newspaper that some treasure-seeking expedition is about to raise the Lusitania. But you never hear it has been raised. A French salvage expert holds the opinion that the big ship never went to the bottom.

The sea where it sank is very deep, and the tremendous pressure from below, he thinks, kept the great liner afloat many fathoms down. Its great hull has probably floated hundreds of miles distant in the 11 years that have passed since the German submarine fired its fatal torpedo that sent so many women and children to a watery grave.—Capper's Weekly.

Bring Bridge Here

WITHIN a few weeks now the Dumbarton bridge will be open for public travel. Bus lines carrying passengers from the eastern counties will soon be in operation; hundreds of private cars will soon be passing over this new artery of travel. And the main lines of transportation from the interior valleys will be diverted to this new and shorter route to San Francisco.

What is now needed to make the scheme complete is a road which will connect with the bridge without having to cross a rail road track. From Redwood City and from here only this will be possible. By the adoption of the recommendations of the committee of the Redwood City Realty Board, and building a direct road to the bridge, no crossing will be necessary. This would mean much to the traveling public, and would add vastly to the safety of travel.

The eastside highway will parallel the tracks of the Southern Pacific from San Francisco to this city and will connect with the bridge at Willow road. But this would mean crossing the railway lines at two points. Traffic through Palo Alto on University avenue will also have to cross the tracks once.

By the construction of an inexpensive stretch of roadway, this city can have a direct connection with the great bay bridge without any railroad crossing whatever.

Can Redwood City afford to neglect this opportunity?

Farm Isolation Gone

AS long as there have been cities there have been paved streets, and asphalt, which we think of usually as a modern product, was used in ancient Babylon by Nabopolassar who was the first to use it for street construction.

His son, Nebuchadnezzar, followed his example, and upon one street of which he was particularly proud, caused to be placed a tablet calling upon his people to "traverse this street in joy" and wish him "eternal age and well-being."

Pompeii built sidewalks of asphalt, and was the first to raise the center of her asphalt streets in order to drain off the water.

Modern highways are transforming farm life in many states, relieving it of its loneliness and placing it in ready contact with all that is going on in the world.

Good roads present more than merely tourists zipping along the highway, or trucks moving from town to town. The finer picture is that of rural homes linked together, with the men, women and children of the farms brought nearer one another.

Social life in the farming sections is possible today, because of the constantly increasing web of hard-surfaced roads, and such life is becoming the envy of city folk.

Only a few years ago, there was little or no state highway construction that is now proving an aid to consolidation of rural schools.

NOTES OF A WORLD TRAVELER

By Professor Ferdinand Schraidt

FOURTH ARTICLE

Coblenz has grown to be a city, too large and prosperous, not to have overshadowed its romantic appearance with a commercial progress, which is not so apparent in the smaller towns up or down the Rhine. The traveller who wishes to see scenes that take him away from the highlights of modern civilization a few centuries back to an age of which he has heard in history or tales of folklore, is therefore eager to board one of the small Rhine steamers, preferably to go up-stream from Coblenz; he can enjoy the beauties of scenery from a comfortable chair on deck, as if he were in a "movie-show" with the fortunate difference, however, that the pictures are stationary and real, and that the change of views is caused by a moving observer, who only regrets that the boat is gliding along too swiftly in order to see and enjoy it all. The shrewd tourist, therefore, selects for his conveyance a slow freight steamer, which will stop for business at most of these attractive little towns and allow him, to become a witness of part of the very life, that is going on along the banks of this mystic stream. He will see more smiling faces than anywhere else, excepting of those, who had the good fortune to have lived and loved here and now must depart from a happy land. The Rhine spells a charm, that is almost proverbial with the Germans; who regard it the inherited treasure of their fatherland; with them it is the country beautiful, an expression of their ideal, that makes the individual forget personal sorrows in view of the wooded hills, topped with ruins of castles who tell with immovable sternness, that generations have lived here in splendour and toiled and then were annihilated as selfish strife swept down into this merry valley leaving ruins for posterity to behold.

But the host of knights and fair damsals lives on in the many queer tales that have been recorded of their deeds and enterprises, with dragons and fairies, giants and dwarfs, with spirits good and evil, and the broken walls with desolate windows, opening a mental perspective away from tangible reality, are only suggestive, that once upon a time many of these super-natural events may really have happened here. The victorious battle of Christianity against paganism is treated poetically in these tales and names like the "Whisper Valley," the "Devil's Ladder," "The Dragonrock," and others are relics of this time, yet used as guides of orientations through the country of today.

This mystic charm of the hills is aided greatly by the little towns themselves, usually located at the foot of a castle and abode of protectors or lords but wisely, the townspeople did not rely entirely upon such protection and they fortified their communities against aggression by water or land with circling walls and numerous watchtowers, silent witnesses today of a struggle that was waged for centuries up and down the Rhine between robber-knights and merchants, the one possessing the daring to claim and to take, the others having the aim and determination to protect life and property and surviving this combat triumphantly.

The little towns visible from the deck of the steamer seem larger than they are in reality, because they consist principally of one long street, which runs parallel with the bank of the river. Steep hills, which at places rise almost out of the water, do not allow for depth of space, upon which residential sections could be located; the Rhine has carved a narrow bed deeply into long miles of rock and slate, and the many turns of its course are showing that it was a hard task that required surveying to locate the "line of least resistance," a curious feature of ingenuity, which in a way is also puzzling the human mind, but not without considerable embarassment to efficiency, if solved with regardless optimism.

Soon after leaving Coblenz in a southerly direction one sees to the right the beautiful castle, "Stozenfels," amid a forest of green foliage, a building well deserving of the name "proud rock," because its main massive turret looks respect-demanding into the country. This is one of the few structures of the 13th century that after its destruction by the French in 1688 has been restored (90 years ago) and is now open to the public. The walls of its main hall are embellished with frescoes, illustrative of the principal attributes of chivalry; Faith, Justice, Poetry, Love, Loyalty and Bravery, ideals, that have beautified the days of the knighthood and outlived its followers.

Almost opposite from "Stozenfels," also high above the Rhine, stands "Lahneck," within whose walls, according to tradition, 12 Knight Templars were slain by bondsmen of the Bishop of Mayence, who then took possession o the beautiful castle. Destroyed by the French in 1689 it was restored almost two hundred years afterwards, and with the imposing castle, "Marksburg," not far from it and on the same bank of the river, forms a picturesque setting, because the latter, having miraculously escaped the general fate of destruction in the 17th century, is in fact, and presents one of the most finest examples of mediaeval fortresses.

The Rhine soon makes a sharp double turn, and not without skill does the man at the wheel guide the tourist steamer at this point past a huge tug boat with five long and narrow barges in tow. The rapid current of the river stems itself against the deeply immersed freighter boats, laden-ed with coal from the north, is no match for the power of steam and sidewheeles, and the convoy moves along unswervingly. Through the smoke of its two-funnelled leader one catches glimpses of the castles just seen, the present and the past, one visible faintly through the screen of the other, a bit of romance clouded up by the machinery of commerce.

To the right the traveller can see now the tower of Boppard, the ancient Bodobriga, founded by the Celts before the Romans fortified it and used it as a depot for their "slingers," (Balistari Bodobricae.) The pleasant town, above which rises the handsome old nunnery of Marienberg, has of late attracted numerous visitors; but many of the picturesque old houses with their quaint wooden beams have consequently been displaced by modern buildings.

There is no time, however, for detailed observation because on the opposite side are soon visible two ruins closely together: "Sterrenberg" and "Liebenstein," named the "Hostile Brothers," who gave cause to a sad story that is told here: Two brothers, sons of the widowed owner of castle "Sterrenberg," were both enamoured of the same young lady, Angela, who preferred the younger of the two, Conrad, whose fiery spirit won her affections, while the silent devoted regards of Henry, the older, made little impression upon the fair one. Angela became engaged to Conrad, when knights were summoned throughout the country to partake in a Crusade to the Orient. The aged father at "Sterrenberg" begged his sons not to desert him, and the less daring Henry gave in to these supplications. Conrad departed, his bride promising to wait for his return, and the father ordered the castle of "Liebenstein" to be erected, close by as a future home for the young couple. The Crusaders returned and with them Conrad, but accompanied by a beautiful Greek woman, whom he decided to make his wife, regardless of his promise and bride Angela, at home. He took possession of the castle "Liebenstein" built for him by his late father, but the ancestral home of "Sterrenberg" was closed to the traitor by Henry, now guardian of the family home. It was unavoidable, that the two knights should draw swords against each other and they were engaged in a mortal combat, when Angela, fearing for the life of Henry whose silent love for her she had detected, bodily interferred and saved them from slaying each other. She then withdrew as a nun into the cloister of "Bornhofen" at the foot of the castle "Sterrenberg," where the older brother now spent his days in solitude and grief, until he changed his knightly attire with the monk's cowl

Conrad, who in the meantime had celebrated loud festivities at Liebenstein, was left by his faithless wife, and took his own life. While the cloisterbells at Bornhofen, where Angela sought peace from the world are still ringing, there is dead silence among the ruins of Sterrenberg and Liebenstein; full-moon shine summer's night tells us—one swords clink brothers.

Douglas MacLean in
The Paramount Picture
'Hold That Lion'

Picture goers who visit the Sequoia theatre next week are assured of a royal good time. Douglas MacLean, acknowledged king of comedy, will be there with his latest mirthquake, "Hold That Lion," supported, as the title promisingly suggests, by several kings of the jungle.

Besides the smiling funster and his unsociable pets, the picture reveals a number of other personalities who share in the general fun and excitement. Constance Howard, a blonde and petite newcomer, makes an impressive screen debut as 'MacLean's leading lady. Walter Hiers, who is just as funny as he is fat and vice versa, contributes a goodly quota of laughs on his own account. Cyril Chadwick, Wade Boteler and George Pearce—all tried and true players—ably second the active and irressible star.

In "Hold That Lion," MacLean starts out to demonstrate that the way of a man to the heart of a maid is sometimes via the big game hunting route. He ends up by proving that love can laugh at lions as well as locksmiths.

More laughs follow in the short reel comedy featuring Lige Conley and Grantland Rice, sport author shares a spot in the program with his "Ball and Bat."

SCOUTS PLAN TO HOLD RALLY

By Billy Mulcahy

The annual Boy Scout training camp rally and reunion is to be held on Friday, October 1 1926 at the Burlingame High School auditorium. The program which is being arranged by Emmet Hays and John Linden will commence at 8 o'clock sharp.

The above conclusion was reached a few days ago at a meeting of camp officers in Burlingame.

Among the interesting features on the program are the showing of the camp movies for the first time first aid and signaling stunts, camp yells and songs, a model campfire program, a repition of the final evening parade, and a daily camp program.

In addition to the program there will be the awarding of 163 merit badges earned at camp and the awarding of the Eagle Scout badeg to Scout Ray Dunton Troop 98 of San Mateo. With the awards will be short remarks by President Charles J. Eldridge and District Commissioner. Frank H. Thrall. President Charles C. Moore of San Francisco Council, will be among the honored guests from our neighboring council. It will be impossible for Scout Executive Raymond O. Hanson of San Francisco to be present as he is attending the Scout Leaders Convention that is being held in Little Rock, Arkansas.

To remind the scouts of old times and the good times we had at camp, the writer who is editor of the San Mateo Scout which was published daily at the camp, is going to reprint a thousand copies of one of the issues that will be distributed at the rally.

In all it looks as though this rally will eclipse any previous rally held in San Mateo county and those who saw the rally last year know what this rally will have to be beter than last year's rally.

During the moving pictures, Field Executive Edward A. Barrer will tell the parents about the camp.

COMMISSION RECEIVES BIDS FOR GRADING BOTTLE NECK

Bids were received this week by the California Highway Commission for grading 1.58 miles near Cypress Lawen cemetery, San Mateo county, the last "bottle neck" on the Peninsula route south of San Francisco. The Kaiser Paving Company of Oakland, was the lowest of six bidders with an offer of $99,299.80 against an engineer's estimate of $118,228.50.

Rights of ways in excess of 100 feet in width, partly on new alignment to eliminate curvature, have been secured by the commission for the co-operative project which is being aided by the City and County of San Francisco and the County of San Mateo.

Plans for paving have been completed and bids will be asked on this feature of the work as soon as grading progresses to a point where the placing of pavement may be commenced. The Cypress lawn project will complete the widening and reconstruction of the Peninsula highway through San Mateo county, initiated by the present commission in 1923.

The bids received today will be considered at a meeting of the commission to be held in San Francisco on Tuesday, September 28th.

HI-Y CLUB ELECTS OFFICERS

The Sequoia Hi-Y Club met at the Congregational church last Monday evening and in addition, to other business, elected the officers for the semester. Mr. John Gill and Donald Bogie gave short talks on the activities that the club should go in for this year and the need that the Hi-Y should fill in the lives of high school boys. The Hi-Y which has been restricted practically altogether in the past to sophomores and upper classmen will be opened up to freshmen as well. A membership campaign will be started this week The club membership is open to any and all high school boys.

The officers elected for the semester are: William Leggett, president; W. T. Kellogg, Jr., vice-presient; Wesley Hayock, treasurer; Gerald Towne, secretary.

Ladies of the Congregational church set up the supper for the boys. Plans are that the meetings of the Hi-Y shall be held at the various churches during the year, meetings to be held for a month in one church and then going to another church for a like period of time and so on.

CHARACTERISTICS of the BANK of ITALY

Keeping step with California

TO keep pace—in a banking way—with the giant strides this state is making, is no simple task.

That the Bank of Italy has done this steadily and consistently—is distinctly evidenced by our last statement of condition showing resources in excess of $400,000,000.

How do we keep step with fast-moving California?

Enthusiasm—a great loyal organization always "on its tip-toes"—constant improvement and expansion of facilities—whole-hearted, democratic service—and plenty of constructive, educational advertising.

Cleaning Without Odor by the F. Thomas Process

Our many years of experience has taught us that it is impossible to do perfect cleaning with cheap, inferior methods. That is why we found it necessary to invest nearly $500,000 in the equipment of a plant and the establishment of an expert organization to do the quality of work demanded by our customer.

With the "F. THOMAS PROCESS we do not only remove every particle of dust but we return your garments without that usual disagreeable smell of gasoline Every drop of gasoline we use in cleaning is redistilled and very highly refined.

Raw gasoline — the kind that you buy fo you automobile — is full of heavy oils and unfit for cleaning fabrics. It is little better than ordinary distillate and leaves a sickening gasoline smel 'n your clothes.

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, successful playwright, but somewhat inclined to wildness, attends the wedding of his sister, Barbara, to whom has been left the great Devon fortune. Laurie had been a gay young chap, but for the last year he has been toeing the mark, through the efforts of Barbara.

Bangs nodded, vaguely. His brown eyes were alternately on the bride and on his chum and partner, her brother. He was conscious of an odd depression, of an emotion, new and poignant, that made him understand the tears of Barbara's women friends. Under the influence of this, he spoke oracularly:

"Weddings are beastly depressing things. What the public wants to see is something cheerful!"

Epstein nodded in his turn. His thoughts, too, were busy. Like many of those around him, he was mentally reducing the spectacle he was watching to terms that he could understand. A wedding conducted on this scale, he estimated, probably represented a total cost of about ten thousand dollars. But what was that to a bride of thirty or forty millions? It was strange her family had left them all to her and none to the boy, even if the boy had been a little wild. But the boy was all right now. He'd make his own fortune if life and woman and the devil would let him alone. He had made a good start already. A few more successes like "The Man Above" would make Epstein forget several failures he had already and unwisely produced this season. If he could get Bangs and Devon to start work at once, on another good play—

A little later, in the automobile that whirled him and Epstein out to the wedding-reception at Devon house, Rodney Bangs briefly developed the wedding theme.

"I suppose the reason why women cry at weddings and men feel glum is that they know what the bride's in for," he remarked gloomily.

Epstein grunted. "You an' me is bachelors," he reminded the momentarily cynical youth. "Ve should vorry!"

"What I'm worrying about is Laurie," Bangs admitted.

Epstein turned to him with awakened interest.

"Vell," he demanded, "what about Laurie? He's all right, ain't he?"

"His sister has always kept a collar and leash on Laurie," Bangs reminded him, "and Laurie has needed them both. Now she's off for Japan on a four-months' honeymoon. The leash and collar are off, too. It's going to be mighty interesting and rather anxious business for us to see what a chap like Laurie does with his new freedom. His nature hasn't changed in a year, you see, though his circumstances have," he added, slowly. "And all his promises to Barbara are off. His year of probation is over."

Epstein grunted again. He was fond of saying that he loved Bangs and Laurie as if they were the sons he had never had, but he was not given to analysis of himself or others, and he had little patience with it. His reply showed a tolerance unusual in him.

"Vell, ve keep an eye on him, don't ve?" he predicted.

Bangs frowned.

"We'll have to do it mighty carefully," he muttered. "If Devon catches us at it, he won't leave us an eye to keep on anything!"

Epstein grunted again.

"Ve keep him busy," he suggested, eagerly. "Start him right avay on another play. Eh? That's the idea!"

Bangs shook his head.

"That's it," he conceded. "But Laurie has decided that he won't work again, just yet. He says he's tired and wants a few months' rest. Besides, he thinks America will declare war before the winter's over. He's going to volunteer as soon as it does, and he doesn't want any loose ends dragging here, any half-finished plays, for example."

Epstein looked worried. This was serious news. Without allowing him time to recover from it, Bangs administered a second jolt.

"And of course, in that case," he added simply, "I'd volunteer, too."

Under the double blow Epstein's head and shoulders went down. He knew in that moment what even he himself had sometimes doubted, that his boasted love for the boys was deep and sincere.

"Oh, vell," he said vaguely, "I guess ve meet all that if it comes, eh? Ve needn't go to it today."

At Devon house they found the congestion characteristic of wedding-receptions. A certain line had been drawn at the church. Seemingly no line at all had been drawn in the matter of guests at the reception. All Barbara Devon's proteges were there, and they were many; all the young folks in her clubs; all the old and new friends of her crowded life. Each of the great and beautiful rooms on the main floor of Devon house held a human frieze as a background for the throng of new-comers that grew rather than lessened as the hours passed.

As Bangs and Epstein entered the main hall Laurie Devon saw them over the heads of the crowd and hurried to meet them, throwing an arm across the shoulder of each. He was in a mood both men loved and feared, a mood of high and reckless exhilaration. He liked and approved of his new brother-in-law. The memory of his own New York triumph was still fresh enough to give him a thrill. He was devoted to his partners, and proud of his association with them and their work. But most of all, and this he himself would loyally have denied, deep in his heart he was exulting fiercely over his coming freedom.

Laurie loved his sister, but he was weary of the leading strings. Henceforth he could live his own life. It should be a life worth while, on that he had decided, and it should continue free from the vices of gambling and drinking, of which he was sure he had cured himself in the past year. He had come into a full realization of the folly of these and of the glory of the work one loves. He hadn't the least notion what he was going to do with his independence, but a boundless delight filled him in the prospect of it. Whatever life held he was convinced would be good. Looking down from his slender height on the plump Epstein and the stocky Bangs, he smiled into the sober face of each, and under the influence of that smile their momentary solemnity fell from them like dropped veils.

"Come and see Barbara," Laurie buoyantly suggested. "She wants to say good-by to you, and to tell you how to tuck me into my crib every night. She's going to slip away pretty soon, you know. Bob and I have got her off in an alcove to get a few minutes' rest."

He led them to this haven, of which only fifty or sixty other guests seemed aware, for the room was but comfortably filled. They found Barbara sitting in a high-backed Spanish chair, against which, in her bridal array and her extraordinary beauty, she made a picture that unaccountably deepened the new depression in Rodney's soul. On her train by the side of the chair, the Infant Samuel slumbered in peace, like an exhausted puppy.

Warren, hovering near his wife, shook hands with the newcomers and responded to their congratulations. Then, slipping his arm through Laurie's, he drew him across the room to where his sister, Mrs. Ordway, was languidly talking to several of the bride's old friends. He knew that Barbara wanted a final and serious word with her brother's partners. Laurie knew it, too, and winked at the pair like an impish child as he permitted himself to be led away.

Young Mrs. Warren, whose title was still so new that she looked startled when they addressed her by it, greeted them warmly and indicated the sleeping Samuel with an apologetic smile.

"His mother is lost somewhere in the crowd," she explained. "He has had two glasses of milk, four fat cakes and three plates of ice cream; and he's either asleep or unconscious, I'm not sure which." Her manner sobered. "I'm so glad to have a moment with you two," she said gently. "You know what I want to talk about."

"We can guess it." Bangs smiled at her with the odd wistfulness his smile always took on when he spoke to Barbara. To Bangs, Barbara had become a temple at whose portal he removed his earth-stained shoes. "You want us to look after Laurie," he added quietly. "Well, you bet we're going to do it."

She smiled again, this time the rare smile that warmed her face like a light from within.

"Then I shall go away happy," she told them. "And there's nothing more to be said; for of course you both understand that I don't distrust Laurie. How could I, after he has been so wonderful all this year. It's only—" she hesitated—"I suppose it's life I'm afraid of," she confessed. "I never used to be. But—well, I learned in New York how helpless we are, sometimes."

Rodney's nod was understanding.

"I know," he robustly agreed. "But it's going to be absolutely all right. Be sure of that."

Epstein added his well-meaning but none too happily chosen bit.

"Laurie can't get into no scrape ve can't get him out of," he earnestly assured Laurie's sister.

Barbara laughed. A circle of newcomers was forming around them.

"We'll let it go at that," she said, and extended a hand to each man. "Good-by. I won't try to thank you. But—God bless you both!"

Under the influence of this final benediction, Epstein waddled over to the corner where Warren, very pale, and Louise Ordway, very much bored, stood surrounded by a group that included Sonya Orieneff. Firmly detaching the bridegroom from this congenial assemblage, Epstein led him to one side.

"Varren," he said solemnly, "I got to congratulate you all over again. You got von voman in a million— No, you got von voman in eighty million!"

Warren laughed, rather shakily. Over the heads of the crowd his eyes caught his wife's and held them for an instant.

"Make it a million million," he suggested joyously, and led Epstein to the supper room.

Laurie was there with Bangs and a group of friends, who, having patronized young Devon a year ago, were endeavoring to wipe out the memory of this indiscretion by an excess of friendly attention.

"No," Warren and Epstein heard him say to Mrs. Lytton and Mrs. Renway, "there's nothing I'd like better than to come, thank you. But I'm going back to New York tomorrow. You see," he added, "this business of marrying off a sister, and attending to all the details and seeing that she conducts herself properly as long as she's in my care, is a bit of a strain. I've got to get back to town and recuperate."

"I suppose you will rest your mind by writing another play?" gushed Mrs. Renway.

Laurie shook his black head.

"Not a bit of it!" he asserted. "Don't even suggest such a thing before Epstein, there. It sounds abhorrently like work."

Mrs. Renway's curiosity had a brief and losing struggle with her good breeding.

"Then what are you going to do?" she demanded coquettishly.

The young man pondered, as if considering the question for the first time.

"Well," he said at last, "between you and me, I'm going in for adventure. I intend to devote the next four months to discovering how much excitement a worthy youth can crowd into his life if he makes a business of going after the gay bird of adventure, and finding it, and putting salt on its tail!"

The puzzled countenance of Mrs. Renway cleared.

"Oh, I see," she said brightly, "you're joking."

Laurie smiled and turned to greet a late guest who had come up behind him. In the little group that had overheard him three pairs of eyes met in startled glances.

"Humph!" said Warren. "Hear that?"

"Nice prospect for us!" muttered Rodney Bangs.

Jacob Epstein looked harassed. A little later he joined the throng in the main hall, and watched the showers of rice fall harmlessly from the polished sides of Barbara's limousine as the bride and groom were whirled away from the brilliant entrance of Devon house.

"She's gone," he said to Bangs as the two men turned and re-entered the still crowded yet suddenly empty house. And he added solemnly, "Believe me, Bangs, on that job she's left us you an' me ve got our hands full!"

CHAPTER II

Rodney Loses a Battle

Rodney Bangs, author of "The Black Pearl" and co-author of "The Man Above," was annoyed. When Mr. Bangs was annoyed he usually betrayed the fact, for his was an open nature.

He was betraying it now. His clear, red-brown eyes were clouded. The healthy pink of his youthful cheeks had deepened to an unbecoming flush. His wide, engaging grin, the grin of a friendly bulldog, was lacking, and his lips were set tight.

Sitting on a low chair in the dressing room of the bachelor apartment he and Lawrence Devon occupied together, Rodney drew on a shoe and stamped his foot down into it with an emphasis that shook the floor. Devon, fastening his tie before the full-length mirror set in the door leading to their common bathroom, started at the sound, like a high-strung prima donna. This was one of Laurie's temperamental mornings.

"What the devil's the matter with you, Bangs?" he demanded, but without ill humor. "Can't you get on a shoe without imitating the recoil of a seventy-five centimeter gun?"

Bangs grunted, drew on the other shoe, and drove his foot into it with increased energy. Laurie looked at him, and this time there was a spark in his black eyes. Very quietly he turned, crossed the small room, and, planting himself in front of his chum, resentfully stared down at the dynamic youth.

"What's the idea?" he demanded. "Are you deliberately trying to be annoying?"

Rodney did not raise his head. His fingers were busy with a complicated knot.

"Oh, shut up!" he muttered.

Laurie, his hands in his pockets, remained where he was. Under his continued inspection the fingers of Bangs grew clumsy. He fumbled with the knot, and, having unfastened it, prolonged to the utmost the process of lacing his shoes. He knew what must come as soon as he settled back in his chair. It had been coming for days. He was in for an unpleasant ten minutes. But the situation was one he had deliberately created as the only possible way of bringing about a serious talk with his friend. Now that it was here he was anx'ous to make the most of it. With head bent and thoughts busy he played for time.

At last, the shoes laced and his campaign mapped out, he sat up and met Laurie's eyes. Their expression of antagonism, temporary though he knew it to be, hurt him. Devon, when he had his own way, and he usually had it, was a singularly sweet-tempered chap. Never before, throughout their year of close association, had he looked at Bangs like that. Rodney knew that he deserved the look. For days past he had deliberately subjected his companion to a series of annoyances, small but intensely irritating.

"Well?" demanded Laurie. "What's the answer?"

"What answer?" Rodney was in the position of a small boy challenged to combat in cold blood. He was experiencing some difficulty in working himself up to the necessary heat for an engagement. But Laurie's next words helped him out.

"You've been making a d—d nuisance of yourself for the last week," he said deliberately. "I want to know why."

Bangs squared his stocky shoulders and rose to his feet. His brown eyes were below the level of his chum's black ones, but the two glances met sharply and a flash passed between them. Under the force of his rising excitement the voice of Rodney shook.

"The reason I've been a d—d nuisance," he said curtly, "is because you've been acting like an infernal fool, and I'm sick of it."

Laurie's lips tightened, but the other rushed on without giving him a chance to reply. The moment was his. He must crowd into it all he had not dared to say before and might not be given a chance to say again.

"Oh, I know what you'll say!" he cried. "It's none of my business, and you're your own master, and all that sort of rot. And I know you're not drinking, and God knows I'm not ass enough to take on any high moral tone and try to preach to you, whatever you do. What gets my goat, Devon, and the only thing I'm worrying about, is this infernal waste of your time and mine."

The girl in the mirror makes her first appearance. Watch for her.

THE TRAIL DRIVERS' MONUMENT FOR SAN ANTONIO

ANDY ADAMS, Author of "The Log of a Cowboy"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Whoopee-ti-ti-yo, git along little dogies,
It's your misfortune, and none of my own.
Whoopee-ti-ti-yo, git along little dogies,
For you know Wyoming'll be your new home!
—Old Cowboy Song.

SAN ANTONIO, where stands the Alamo, the sacred shrine of liberty in the Lone Star state, is to have another memorial before which Texans will bow in homage to the historic past. It is to be a monument to the trail drivers upon whose mighty labors the prosperity of the state is based and whose deeds form one of the most romantic incidents in American pioneer history. The memorial is to cost $100,000 and Gutzon Borglum of Stone mountain fame is now at work on it. Citizens of San Antonio have raised $50,000 of that amount and the other $50,000 is to be raised by contributions from all parts of the state.

When it is completed and dedicated the dream of the Old Trail Drivers' association, that rapidly dwindling band of men who rode the ranges of the Southwest more than half a century ago, to commemorate the service of their comrades who in the sixties and seventies drove nearly 10,000,000 head of beef cattle out of Texas to the railroad towns of Kansas and brought back with them approximately $100,000,000 to save Texas and the cattle industry will be realized.

Last year the annual reunion of the Old Trail Drivers' association was a three-day affair with the selection of the site for the Borglum monument as one of the main features. The sculptor himself was there, put on a cowboy costume and rode in the parade which was the climax of the reunion. Other interesting figures in the parade were "Uncle Charley" Goodnight, former owner of the famous Goodnight ranch, whose experiments in crossing buffalo and Galloway cattle to produce the "catalo" gave him the nickname of "Catalo" Goodnight; "Uncle George" Glenn, a seventy-five-year-old negro and one of the most-beloved members of the association, who led a "riderless horse," in memory of his "boss" who had perished on the trail, and Mrs. Amanda Burks, the only woman alive known to have made the trip over the old Chisholm trail to Abilene, Kan., who is said to be the original of Taisie Lockhart, the heroine in Emerson Hough's "North of 36."

The president of the association is George W. Saunders of San Antonio and he has been the mainspring of the organization and the force behind the movement to erect the memorial in San Antonio. The association is an offshoot from the Texas Cattle Raisers' association, which meets every year to discuss ways and means for the improvement of the cattle business. At one of these meetings (in 1915) Mr. Saunders proposed an auxiliary organization of old-time trail drivers to be composed of men who "went up the trail" in the early days. The organization was formed that year and in 1916 the first annual convention was held in Houston. Mr. Saunders became president in 1917, and has been the head of the association since that time.

At the 1917 reunion Mr. Saunders reported that the association had a membership of 500. Since then sons of the old trail drivers have been made eligible for membership. It also has a ladies' auxiliary, of which Mrs. R. R. Russell is chairman, and this auxiliary has had a large share in the work of raising money for the San Antonio memorial.

But the monument and the annual reunion are not the only memorials which the surviving trail drivers have erected to the comrades of their youth. There is one which is more durable than bronze or stone and which, even more strikingly than the sculptor's art, is an accurate picture of the lives and times of the men who engaged in the epic cattle trade. That is the book called "The Trail Drivers of Texas," compiled and edited by J. Marvin Hunter and published under the direction of President Saunders. The book was originally issued in two volumes, the first appearing in 1920 and the second in 1923. This year the two volumes have been issued as one by the Cokesbury Press of Nashville, Tenn.

When the second volume appeared three years ago, J. Frank Doble, a Texan, wrote of it: "'The Trail Drivers of Texas' is not literature. Neither is Hakluyt's 'Voyages' literature. Yet I have long thought the latter far superior in reality, in dramatic interest, in the reflection of a great body of men of a great age—the English seamen of the 'spacious times' of Queen Elizabeth to Kingsley's 'Westward Ho!' which is literature. 'The Trail Drivers' is the very stuff from which literature is made, as Emerson Hough acknowledged and demonstrated in his 'North of 36.' Yet these volumes are more than mere source books. They are a remarkable social document. A hundred years hence people will read them for a picture of the men and times they record as we now read the diary of Samuel Pepys for its reflection not only of Pepys, but of the age of the Restoration.

"This is high praise; it is meant for such. Take these sketches from 'The Trail Drivers of Texas,' take Andy Adams' 'The Outlet,' take 'North of 36,' and if nothing else had been written on the subject, if nothing else were ever written, yet we should have a full and a just picture of the most picturesque and probably the most epic movement of men in the Western hemisphere—the movement of 9,800,000 cattle and 1,000,000 horses by 35,000 men in 28 years' time (estimate given by Saunders) over a weedless and beeless and an uncharted land, stretching from the Gulf of Mexico—nay, in some instances from far into Mexico—clear to the Dominion of Canada."

This book, a collection of true stories of the actual experiences of these old-time cowmen, is proof again that "truth is stranger than fiction." Do you remember when Emerson Hough's "North of 36" appeared some three years ago and an Eastern critic took him to task for "historical inaccuracy" and kindred sins? Perhaps you remember, too, the furore that was raised by this critic's words. A great chorus of protest against the critic's aspersions went up. Such noted writers as Andy Adams, Charles Siringo, Eugene Manlove Rhodes, William McLeod Raine, J. Frank Davis, E. E. Harriman and Hugh Pendexter, Charles M. Russell, the noted cowboy painter, President Saunders of the Old Trail Drivers' association and other members of that association, as well as dozens of old-timers in every part of the country who had ridden the cattle trails, rallied to Hough's defense and had a hand in "taking several yards of skin" off of that particular critic before they were through with him. The fact was that Hough had obtained much of his data for his novel from "The Trail Drivers" book. Some of his "fiction" which seemed improbable or untrue was based on solid fact as told by the old-timers whose narratives appear in this book, and in some cases he actually toned down fact because it would have seemed too improbable!

In fact "The Trail Drivers of Texas" is full of material which a writer of fiction might hesitate to use lest his tale be considered improbable. In it are hundreds of stories of human endurance tested to the limit, of countless perils along the trail, from stampedes, from thirst, from hunger, from hostile Indians and even more desperate white men, of heroic deeds by men of whom President Saunders has well said, "I fear there will never be another set of men with such traits of character." Andy Adams' "Log of a Cowboy" has well been called the "epic of the cattle trade." In this compilation of the experiences of hundreds of other old-timers there is material for a dozen epics of the cattle trade, even though to Andy Adams must go the credit for having written the first one.

The conditions which produced these men now seem very remote and it is difficult to realize that it all began only sixty years ago, well within memory of many men now living. Consider first the cause and then the result will be more easily understood. At the close of the Civil war Texans who had served in the Confederate armies came home to find their state in a deplorable condition. It was virtually bankrupt. Texas possessed great wealth, but it was wealth which could not be realized upon. Here's why: During the war old men, small boys and negroes had taken of the stock on the range, but the range overstocked and there was no market for The western railroads had just begun to west into Kansas and many hundred miles arated the Texas herds from the railroads in Kansas from which the cattle could be east to the markets which wanted the cattle.

A HERD ON THE TRAIL (From Harper's Weekly, 1874) In "The Pageant of America", Yale University Press

In 1866 one or two small herds had north over a trail which later became famous the Chisholm trail (it was named for Jesse holm, a Cherokee cattle trader who had the frontier posts before and during the and despite many hardships had proved that a linking of demand and supply were possible But the real impetus to the trade came about the result of a conference in Junction City, Kan. in 1867 between Col. J. J. Meyers, a former member of the Fremont expedition and a Texas cattle hunter, and Joseph H. McCoy, a business man of Illinois. The arrangement was for Meyers to gather cattle in Texas, drive them overland to Abilene, Kan., where McCoy was to take charge and arrange for the shipment east. The news of the success of these two men spread like wild fire among the Texas cattlemen and each successive year saw the mighty army of cattle and horses marching north. And this continued for more than a quarter of a century!

One of the points in Emerson Hough's "North of 36" to which the critic took exception was Hough's having a herd of 4,500 go over the trail. Yet the fact remains that herds of that size and even larger (5,000 and 6,000 in later years) did go north over the Old Chisholm trail. For they were in big numbers in those days. In this book is a description of a trail herd strung out for 20 miles from "point" (the leaders) to "drag" (the rear). One old-timer tells of the joining of three herds thus: "When the two other herds came up to us we threw all three together and had about 9,000 in the bunch. Four thousand head of the cattle were to be selected from this main herd and we started cutting early in the afternoon. At quitting time we had 500 head cut and the rest and his men took this bunch to hold for the night.

"At sundown, when we bedded down the herd there were eleven trail herds in sight. Along the night a terrible storm came up. It was the worst for wind, rain and lightning I ever experienced. The cattle in all the herds broke and next morning they were scattered over the country as far as the eye could see in every direction. In the eleven trail herds were mixed up together. There were about 120 cowboys in the eleven outfits and when we had made the general round up we had about 33,000 head in one bunch. We worked for ten days before we could get them separated and in shape to get under way."

One old-timer tells of swimming herds across the Red river when it was half a mile wide, doing it 13 times in one day! Another tells of riding three days and nights on one horse without sleep and with very little to eat. Another tells the story, too, of one outfit which arrived in Kansas with its cowboys actually on foot. They had lost their horses but they brought the cattle through!

No wonder Texas is proud of these men and that first trail driver who set forth in 1866 Columbus-like, dared the unknown to drive cattle over the trackless waste to the north. Many of the hundreds who followed in his footsteps and endured all manner of hardship and peril—and wishes to pay her meed of honor to them while some of them still live.

Writer Perplexed Over Shakespeare

The three hundred and sixty-second anniversary of Shakespeare's birth was celebrated recently in almost every city in England. We don't quite understand why so much attention was paid to a dramatic writer who ignored all the well-known modern canons of his art.

This fellow Shakespeare didn't go in for sex stuff, although he was no prude. He had no notion of capitalizing flaming youth. The salacious wasn't dragged into his plays for the box-office appeal. He didn't even crusade against undesirable tendencies.

It seemed to be his simple aim to interpret life in many phases, to develop characters and portray their behavior in various situations, and when the opportunity offered, to use language of thrilling beauty. Pretty punk, we'll say, by all the popular modern standards. He ought to have been a failure, long ago forgotten. Instead, the world seems to treasure his memory, and it still goes to see his plays. The thing is terribly perplexing and we have no explanation to offer.—Kansas City Star.

Unduly Alarmed

Little Catherine had just arrived at her uncle's farm on her very first visit to the country. In the yard she saw a hen gathering her brood of chicks under her wing for the night. In great excitement she ran up to her uncle, exclaiming: "Shoo! Shoo! You naughty thing! You mustn't sit on those pretty little birds."—Boston Transcript.

Worth-While Praise Is Heaped on Bobby Jones

Perhaps the overseas compliment Bobby Jones appreciates most is that of the veteran linksman, golf writer and pal of Harry Vardon, when he solemnly said: "I resairve the right to bracketing Bobby Jones with Harry Vardon."

To understand the full significance of this reservation of right it is necessary to take into consideration the veneration in which Vardon is held by his countrymen. To every Briton the name of Vardon is synonymous for perfection in golf. To compare anyone with Vardon has always been akin to sacrilege. Yet here is Taylor, Vardon's pal, openly announcing that he ranks Bobby on a par with the immortal Harry.

J. H. made that statement prior to Jones' triumph at Saint Annes. Taylor's remarks were elicited by Bobby's astounding qualifying feat at Sunningdale, of which J. H. said: "I question whether anything so stupendous has ever before happened on the links."

Cleveland Holds Corner on Triple-Play Heroes

With the addition this season of Ernie Padgett, formerly of the Boston Braves, Cleveland has had four triple-play heroes on its pay roll at various times. The others were Neal Ball, Bill Wamby and George Burns.

Ball and Wamby made their unassisted three-ply killings while cavorting in Cleveland uniforms. Burns made his while with the Boston Red Sox and Padgett as a member of the Boston Braves.

Wamby's was the most spectacular, coming in the 1920 world series with Brooklyn.

National League Obtains Ebbets Field for Play

The National Professional Football league emerged victorious from one of the first important tests with its newly organized rival, the American League of professional Football clubs, by gaining an agreement for the use of Ebbets field as a Brooklyn playing site. Both organizations, through their Brooklyn franchise holders, had sought the park, but Edward C. Butler, former Cornell star, representing a business men's syndicate, announced he had secured it for the National league. This was confirmed later by officials of the Brooklyn Baseball club.

Played Every Hop Just Right, but the Last One

Bill Whitman, scout for the Chicago Cubs, was down in the Cotton States league recently looking them over. The home team put up a miserable game this day. There were errors galore, the infielders in particular having a tough time, every one of them making one or more bobbies.

After the game, Whitman saw the manager. "Did you see my infield today?" he asked Whitman. "Didn't it work great—the boys played every hop right but the last one."

No-Hit Against Pirates

Charley Ketchum, hurler for the Akron General Tires team, recently pitched a no-hit, no-run game against the Pittsburgh Pirates in an exhibition contest and enabled his team to shut out the world's champion, 6 to 0. It was Ketchum's second no-hit, no-run game in eight days.

Pro Turns in 12 Birdies

Judging by the returns that keep filtering in, no one section of the country enjoys a monopoly when it comes to low golf scoring. About the most brilliant performance heard of in a long time was a round by Ed Dudley, professional at the Oklahoma City Golf and Country club. During the course of the 18 holes, Dudley had no less than 12 birdies, going out in 33 and back in 30 for a 63. Par for the layout is 73. Other low scores have been reported.

FOOTBALL SPOILS BIB FALK'S ARM

Forgot a Promised Bonus When Alma Mater Called.

Loyalty to his alma mater blasted his brilliant major league twirling prospects, but in compensation afforded "Bib" Falk the opportunity of stamping himself one of the hardest-hitting outfielders now in baseball.

The Chicago mauler, who is now bidding for the peak of the American league batting average column, was the outstanding baseball and football player of Texas university in 1918, 1919 and 1920. He is yet rated as the greatest southpaw hurler produced by any Texas college or university.

During the three years he toiled on the hillock for the Longhorns he lost not a single game, and was the biggest factor in the winning of three southwest conference championships. In diamond parlance "Bib" had everything—control, speed, curves, change of pace, a mystifying knuckle ball, endurance, pitching sense. When not on the mound, Falk played first base. He fielded the initial sack well and hit hard; but Texas university fans thought of him as a pitcher, not as a hitter.

Falk was an All-Southwestern tackle on the football elevens of 1917 and 1918.

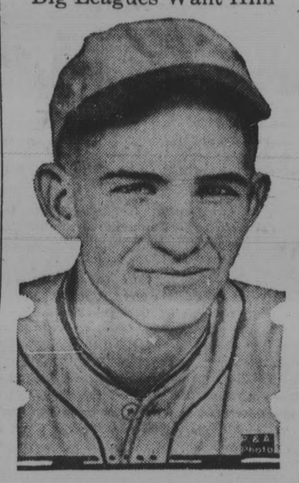

In the summer of 1919, Falk signed with the White Sox, with the understanding he was to receive a substantial bonus if he refrained from playing football. He was to report after the 1920 college baseball season.

The Longhorns got away to a dismal start in 1919. Falk tossed away the bonus that would have been his and donned his football togs. Inspired in large measure by Falk's stirring play, the Longhorns "came back" with several brilliant victories.

Falk emerged from the bruising football season with a badly injured left shoulder and arm. His "wing" troubled him throughout the 1920 collegiate season, though undaunted by the pain, he pitched the Longhorns to a conference diamond championship.

When he reported to the Chisox, it was apparent his pitching days were over. Rendered only more determined to stick to the big show, "Bib" soon convinced "Kid" Gleason of his promise as a hitter.

Big Leagues Want Him

Four major league clubs are after Peewee Wanninger, shortstop of the St. Paul American association club and former Yankee player. The Philadelphia Athletics, St. Louis Browns and Chicago Cubs have had their agents watching the work of the youngster, and Brooklyn has asked the local club for a price. Wanninger came to St. Paul in the deal that sent Mark Koehig to the New York Yankees.

Says Tanlac Spells Health

Mother of 4 Children Escapes Serious Condition Caused by Nervousness, Gastritis, Dizzy Spells. Strength Restored. Gains 12 Pounds

Many women endure pain and suffering needlessly. As Mrs. Hattie Franklin, 1054 Georgia Street, Los Angeles, California, recently said: "A mother must have good health. For years I suffered from a nervous run-down condition. My appetite was never good. Stomach pains and nervous spells followed every meal. And I was quite unfit to do my housework.

"All the remedies I tried failed to help me. I wasted away until I was down to 95 pounds. Then Tanlac came to the rescue. I found myself feeling like a new woman. I gained 12 pounds and felt stronger. And now when I feel less energetic I take Tanlac. To me this wonderful tonic spells h-e-a-l-t-h."

Tanlac, nature's remedy made from roots, barks and herbs according to the famous Tanlac formula, usually builds strength and good health. First bottle gives amazing results. At druggists. Over 40 million bottles sold.

Bonaparte Relic for Arlington Cemetery

A relic of the captivity and death of Napoleon Bonaparte on the island of St. Helena, is to be placed in the Arlington National cemetery. It is a cutting from a weeping willow tree planted by Cuyler Reynolds, on his estate at Alton, N. Y., in 1900, which tree was originally planted in New Jersey in 1870, as a slip from a tree planted in front of Napoleon's tomb at St. Helena in 1821. That slip was brought to the United States by Justice Charles P. Daley, at that time president of the Geographic society.

The historic cutting will be planted near "Sheridan Spring," just inside the Sheridan gateway, on the east side of the cemetery, on the military road, separating the abode of the heroic dead from the Arlington experimental farm. If it thrives it will be the only weeping willow tree within the limits of the cemetery.

Etruscan Study Planned

The Etruscans, predecessors of the Roman civilization in the Italian peninsula, are to have their little-known history investigated by a group of Italian scholars, who organized for this purpose at a national Etruscan congress recently held at Milan. Present knowledge of the Etruscan race and its culture is very fragmentary, though they had a high civilization and proud cities in Italy when Rome was a mere collection of huts beside the Tiber. Their influence was strongly felt in the days of the early republic, and survivals of their religion probably held in the cults of Rome to the very end of paganism. It is believed by one of the Italian scholars interested in the movement that the famous buried city of Pompeii was originally an Etruscan settlement.

How Times Change

Jean, age ten, living in Park avenue, has been in the habit for several years of visiting her cousin Oliver in the country for a week each summer. This summer she said nothing about going. She showed none of her former enthusiasm for making the journey, and finally her mother said: "Well, Jean, how about the visit to the farm this summer?"

"Oh, I don't think I'll go," she replied.

"Why not?" asked the mother.

"Well, it's not the same town there since the goat died," she said.—Indianapolis News.

FIRST to adopt DUCO

THE General Motors Research Laboratories cooperated with E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, Inc., in the development of Duco—an achievement ranking in importance with the invention of the self-starter.

DUCO is not only far more lasting than paint and varnish; it is finer, more beautiful and more economical to apply in factory production.

DUCO was first adopted by Oakland, and immediately thereafter by the rest of the General Motors cars.

BUYERS of General Motors cars have profited by the development of this finer, more enduring finish. Their cars wear well longer.

First To Cross Dumbarton Bridge

Miss Carmel O'Keefe and her chum, Dorothy Taylor were the first two children to cross the new Dumbarton bridge. Last Sunday the girls were chaperoned by T. M. McFarlane, the well-known realty broker of North Palo Alto and crossed the span to the Alameda side. They were very proud of the fact that they were first to cross the bridge that connects the two counties and over which thousands will travel in years to come. The vast products of the San Joaquin valley will find their way over the bridge to the San Francisco market. This is the first span over the San Francisco bay. In years to come other bridges will be constructed but Dumbarton is the pioneer. Miss O'Keefe and Miss Taylor when they merge into womanhood will look back with pride upon the day they crossed the new bridge for the first time.

Memorial To Senator Felton

Mrs. Delaware Nelson, the daughter of the late Senator C. N Felton, has given a grove of redwoods in Mendocino county to the state as a memorial to her father. The grove is the finest in the state. It consists of one hundred acres of virgin timber. It is gratifying to known that the people of means of the state see the value of these trees to future generations. More redwoods should be spared. These age-old trees are the attraction of the state, the marvel of the tourist and an inspiration to the nature lover and should be saved from the woodman's ax. The San Mateo county supervisors, who some time ago purchased a grove at Pescadero, built a monument to their foresight and enterprise in setting aside this beautiful forest of gigantic redwoods for the use of future generations ans a playground for the citizens of the state Let other wealthy residents tof the state follow the example set by Mrs. Nelson. Her father was, in his time, one of the foremost men of the state and this memorial is worthy of his name.

Laudible Work

The Menlo Park Improvement Association is taking up a laudible work in endeavoring to straighten out the entanglement caused by the duplication of names of many streets in Menlo Park. There are three Fremont streets, four Oak avenues, two Menlo avenues, etc. These thoroughfares are to be renamed. Confusion always arises when the fire alarm is made from these streets, the firemen are puzzled and many times are unable to find the place of the conflagration The association also has in mind the work of numbering all the houses in Menlo Park. This is in view of the fact that the postofice department has in contemplation the starting of a free delivery very soon. The community is growing so rapidly that the population demands this service.

WOODSIDE

Three times this week the Woodside fire department has been called out to fight fires but in each case so quick was the response of the firemen that the fire was put under control before any great headway had been attained and before any serious damage had been done.

The Lick-Wilmerding School of San Francisco held its annual picnic in Fred Mighall's redwood grove on Friday last. A large number of young people motored down from the city and spent the day in games and in walks about our countryside.

The Masonic bodies of Redwood City held their picnic on the grounds of the Bear Gulch Water Co., across the highway from the William Roth place.

Russell Slade and family will take possession of their new home here this week end having been delayed for two weeks by work upon the grounds.

Mrs. George Shine underwent an operation for the removal of her tonsils at a Palo Alto hospital on Friday.

William White cut his hand so severely with his mother's butcher knife that he had to be rushed to Redwood City for medical treatment on Thursday morning.

Mrs. Bradford Leavitt with her niece, Miss Margery Smith, and her grand-daughter, Grace Helen Eaves, will leave here on Tuesday for their home in Pasadena. Dr. Leavitt will drive up from the southern city and motor them home.

A baseball game between the Woodside Firemen and the Redwood City Firemen is scheduled for Sunday. The local boys have been wading in victory over their rivals recently and hope to maintain their stride on Sunday.

The teaching force of Los Lomitas School entertained twenty-five of their fellow teachers of the district on Tuesday afternoon. After the reading of a paper on the tendencies of modern education, a round-table discussion was had.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Blackington entertained with a box party at the Jackie Coogan circus on Sunday last.

Mrs. Henry MacArthur invited eighteen of her friends from Palo Alto for supper at her log cabin last week.

W. D. McCann will return to the city about the middle of October. He has been chiefly engaged this summer in building roads to open up the hill country in the western part of his tract, where he plans to build his permanent residence.

SEEKS PLACE IN SUPREME COURT

With the signatures of nearly 10,000 qualified voters secured on the petition of Joseph McInerney for a place on the November ballot for the unexpired term of the late Justice Thomas J. Lennon of the State Supreme Court, the necessary 13,000 signatures will be ready for filing in a few days, according to announcement this week at the McInerney headquarters in the Mills building in San Francisco.

McInerney managed the campaign for the late Judge Lennon, and when ill health forced the latter to abandon his active schedule, McInerney personally toured the state in Judge Lennon's behalf. As a result of his faithful advocacy of Judge Lennon's candidacy, and because of his intimate association with the work and idealism of the late Justice, Lennon's friends in all parts of California are rallying to the support of McInerney and recommending him as "the logical man to carry on the work of Judge Lennon."

During his many years of practice in the courts of this state, McInerney has achieved a widespread reputation as an attorney of ability and probity. Before entering upon his legal career he was well known as a newspaper reporter. He was educated in the schools of San Francisco, and belongs to many civic and fraternal organizations which have enlisted in his campaign.

Blasco Ibanez, author of note, and Fred Niblo, director extra ordinary, have combined their talents in "The Temptress," a very recent production under the Cosmopolitan banner which will be shown Monday and Tuesday at the Sequoia theatre.

Greta Garbo and Antonio Moreno head a notable cast in which is included Lionel Barymore, Marc MacDermott, Roy D'Arcy, Virginia Brown Faire and others. It was directed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios by Fred Niblo as his first production since "Ben-Hur."

Theodore Kosloof, famous dance creator, directs a glittering ballet spectacle, laid in a Parisian rendezvous of Bohemian revelry.

Lloyd Hamilton provides the comedy part of the bill with his latest release and there is in addition a short reel of funny sayings from the press.

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD FOR MRS. E. F. GRAESSLER

Funeral services were held Tuesday morning from Mt. Carmel Catholic church for Mrs. Ernest F. Graessler, wife of the well-known cement contractor of this city, who passed away at her home on Hopkins street Sunday. The services were in charge of Layng & Tinney and were conducted by Rev. C. E. Kennedy. The requiem mass was followed by interment at Holy Cross cemetery at Colma.

Mrs. Graessler had been in poor health for the past year, and for several weeks little hope was held for her recovery. Her death was, however, a great shock to her family and many friends. She is survived by her husband and by two sisters, Mrs. W. F. Brown of this city and Mrs. S. F. Sypher of Chico. She was a native of Indiana and was 52 years of age.
